"The debut play 'LOU' by Haley Rice reclaims the story of Salome, putting the thinker's brilliant mind and charismatic personality in the center of the picture. Kate Moore Heaney directs the all-female cast of six with fiery Mieko Gavia in the title role. To put it bluntly, ladies kick ass."

Haley Rice hails from Nashville, TN. While she graduated from the NYFA's Musical Theatre Conservatory and has a BA in voice and theatre from the University of South Carolina, she backpacked through Europe for the better part of 2015 and considers that her greatest education. She also trained extensively at the Matthew Corozine Studio. In 2017, her play LOU, the story of the great scholar and leading lady of psychoanalysis Lou Salome, premiered at The Paradise Factory in NYC, receiving features in The HuffPost and Broadway Select.
